"This groundbreaking report has already become a classic."

—DEBORAH TANNEN, UNIVERSITY PROFESSOR OF LINGUISTICS AT GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY AND AUTHOR OF YOU JUST DON’T UNDERSTAND AND TALKING FROM 9 TO 5

“As long as schools remain places of unequal opportunity for girls, we need to know what is in How Schools Shortchange Girls—The AAUW Report. And, we must do something about what this thorough report tells us.”

—JOHNNETTA B. COLE, PRESIDENT OF SPelman COLLEGE

“Our country needs all the brain power it can muster to compete in today’s world. Ignoring half of it, or not allowing that half to develop to its fullest, means that we squander a great deal of our potential.”

—KATHRYN WHITFILL, PRESIDENT, THE NATIONAL PTA

“This is dynamite. How much longer can we allow our schools to be part of a culture that turns self-confident and assertive young girls into underachieving and constrained adolescents? These are important findings for our teachers.”

—KEITH GEIGER, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

“Since its first report in 1885, which debunked the notion that a woman’s health would be jeopardized if she went to college, AAUW has been challenging barriers to women in higher education insisting that women cannot achieve equality in society without equal educational opportunities. Today, over a century later, AAUW has broken new ground again with its revelation that the glass ceiling is, in fact, in place long before women reach the corporate board-rooms: it begins to be erected in kindergarten.

How Schools Shortchange Girls is a wake-up call to parents, teachers and policymakers. The reverberations of its startling findings are being felt in classrooms across the country, bringing unprecedented, sorely-needed awareness to the problem of pervasive gender bias in America’s schools.”

—PEGGY ORENSTEIN, AUTHOR OF SCHOOLGIRLS: YOUNG WOMEN, SELF-ESTEEM AND THE CONFIDENCE GAP.
